NEWS:

FOCUS TURNS TO RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AFTER YES VOTE

Published: 16 November 2017

Australians have voted Yes on same-sex marriage, with the postal survey returning a 61.6 per cent result in favour of the reform, as attention now turns to calls for protection of religious freedom, The Australian reports.

Prime Minister Malcolm Turnbull has cleared the ground for a compromise that aims to protect religious freedom, as he vows to pass laws by Christmas.

Federal parliament acted swiftly to start debate on the new marriage laws, with Attorney-General George Brandis offering to toughen protections for free speech and assuage the fears of No voters who object to the contentious change.

The Yes case secured a majority in all states and in 133 of the nation's 150 federal electorates, with 7.8 million people voting for change and 4.9 million voting against.

The Prime Minister declared the outcome a victory for "commitment and love" and cited the 79.5 per cent response rate as vindication of his election pledge to take the decision to the people.

Bill Shorten told a rally that the nation had voted for diversity to be "accepted, supported and respected" in a modern Australia.

President of the Australian Catholic Bishops Conference, Archbishop Denis Hart, said a change in civil law did not change the Catholic understanding of the nature of marriage, and parliament must work to unify Australians by respecting different views on marriage.

"Parliamentarians must recognise and respect the concerns of the more than 4.8 million Australians who opposed a change to the definition of marriage by putting in place strong conscience and religious freedom protections," he said in a statement.

"These protections must ensure that Australians can continue to express their views on marriage, that faith-based schools can continue to teach the traditional understanding of marriage and that organisations can continue to operate in a manner that is consistent with those values."

The Sydney Morning Herald reports that faith played a heavy role in determining voting patterns, underscoring the role that religious leaders could play in carving out protections as the parliament looks to legislate.

The highest "yes" votes came in areas where at least four in 10 people have no religious affiliation, whereas areas with high numbers of Muslims and Catholics, particularly in the suburbs of western Sydney, voted most strongly against same-sex marriage.

SCRIPTURE REFLECTION:

It is not enough that we wait patiently. We are expected to be industrious as we await the advent of the reign of God. We have all been entrusted with talents that really belong to God, and we must use these talents to the best of our ability in the interim between the Lord's departure and his final return. The ideal wisdom figure in the first reading is a model of such industriousness.

Fidelity to the reign of God requires that we be willing to take risks. We do not know the time of the Lord's coming, and so there will have to be a kind of tentativeness to all of our plans. We will never be able to be certain that they will be brought to fruition. We must spend and be spent without the assurance that we will be able to reap the rewards of our investment. To refuse to risk is to refuse to trust.

If we have been wise and have industriously employed the Lord's talents, which were entrusted to us, we will be richly rewarded. However, if we have not realised the potential that is possessed by our talents, and if we have not employed them as they were meant to be employed, we will be punished. The foolish man in the gospel knew that the householder was exacting. He had some idea of what to expect. He made his choice and he had to accept the consequences of that choice.
